

Marek J. BATTEK

REVIEW: Tom Mangold, John Pencyate, *WIETNAM: WOJNA POD ZIEMIĄ
(original title THE TUNNELS OF CU CHI)

In the time of Vietnam War (1957–1975) Viet Cong (communist partisans) dug difficult to imagine a network of tunnels and major underground structures for various purposes. Their main grouping was located in the province of Cu Chi, located between the western edge of Saigon (now Ho Chi Minh City) and the border with Cambodia, but also were constructed smaller facilities in other parts of South Vietnam

The authors of a book gathered a lot of information about the construction of tunnels, the organization of life in them, how to protect them from the enemy, and ways to combat US soldiers who were trying to master it. It contains many accounts of participants of the conflict, fighting both the NFWWP and the US, as well as civilians hiding in tunnels.

The book is a schematic drawing showing the layout of the excavations, as well as some maps which show the area of fighting, also contains photos.